Robert Nadeau Shihan began his martial arts training in the 1950's, studying judo, karate, and defensive tactics as a police officer in Redwood City, CA. In the 1960's he left police work, traveling to Japan to study with Aikido founder Morihei Ueshiba. He received personal instruction and guidance from O' Sensei over a period of several years. Throughout the 1970's and 1980's his work brought Aikido concepts into the fields of psychology and the healing arts. Nadeau Shihan has been a major influence in the development of Aikido in the United States and on many of today's Aikido instructors. His approach to martial arts training transcends technique to give students something applicable to life and their evolution.
